I used charcoal and carbon pencil to draw this bug. The charcoal gave me the ability to form dark and deep tones. The shape of the bug is very bulky and curved. I tried to show this in my drawing. I used charcoal and carbon because the bug has no vibrant colours and is mainly black. I think I am now going to develop my idea from looking at different types of bugs and try out some compositions.

Here I have painted a self portrait. I have done this because I am thinking of doing a self portrait for a final idea. I have added bugs to the piece to connect with my theme of bugs and people. The huge beetle in the piece adds masculinity. All the pictures I used were primary sources. I feel the eyes are a real stand out feature to the piece. I added lots of highlights to the hair to add texture. I am now going to create my final ideas.

Photography

I have decided that for one of my final piece ideas I will paint me and my friend. Doing a painting of people of the opposite sex would show another difference.

I made sure we put expressions on our faces so it would give the piece some character. As my friend's face seems quite peaceful I will put beautiful bugs on her like butterflies. I will put bugs like spiders and scorpions on me because my face looks more fearful. By combining certain pictures I could make the piece comical or serious.

Final idea 1

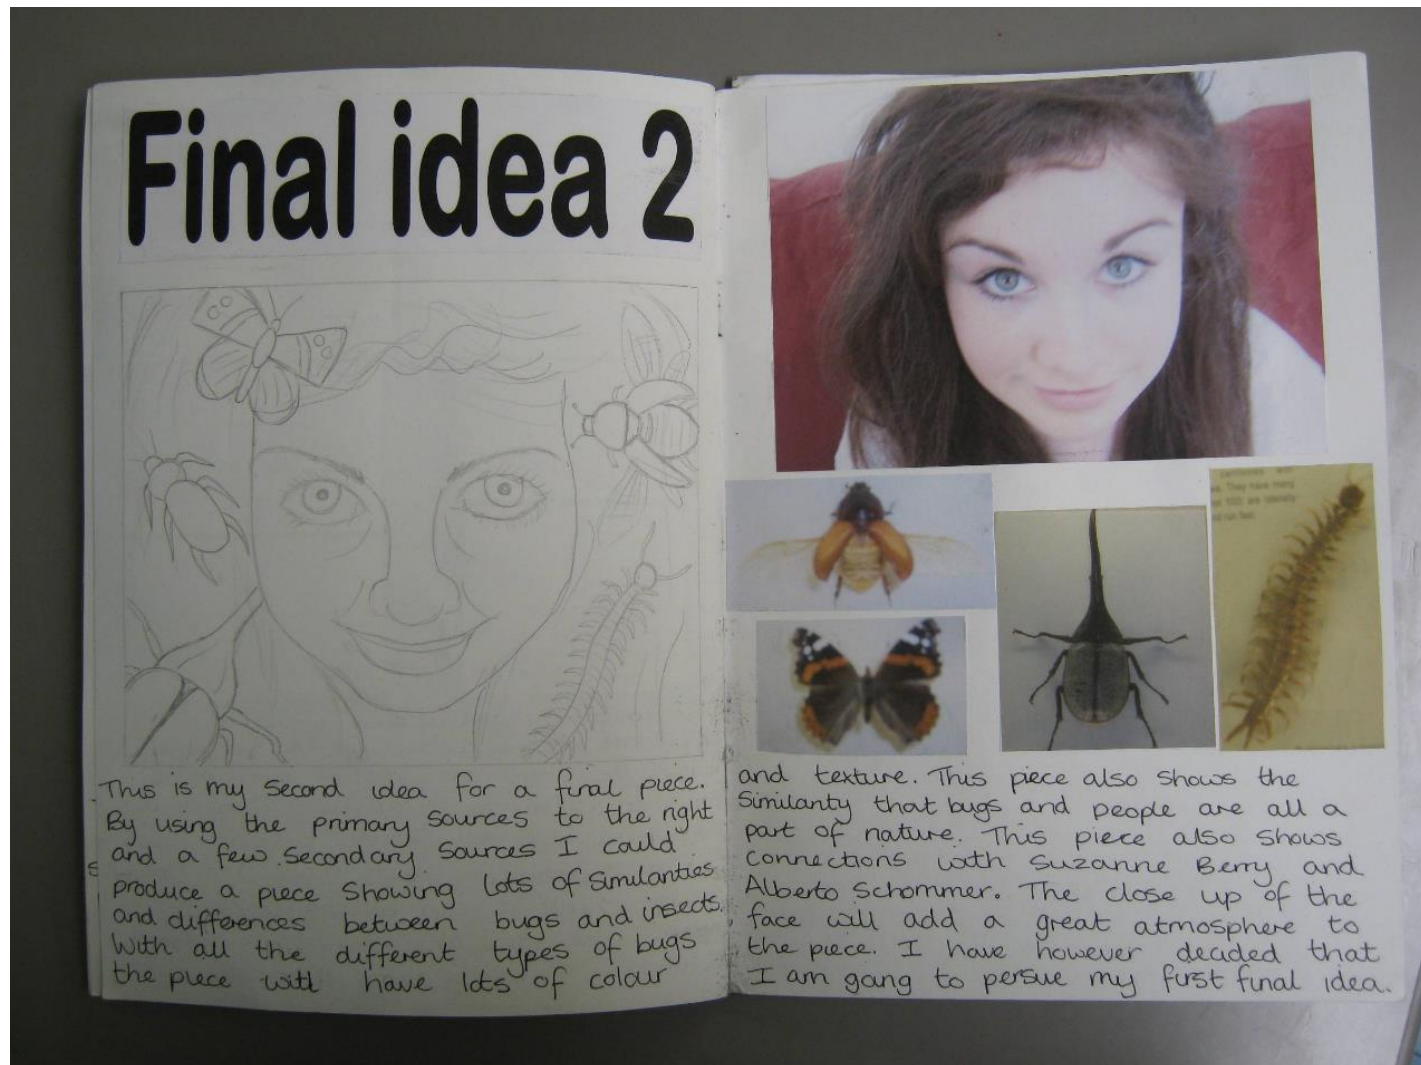

This is my first final idea. I am planning to paint the bugs and insects in the style of Suzanne Berry to show artist research. The pictures I have chosen have lots of expression which will make it more interesting. It will also have lots of texture.

The similarities and differences are that the people are of the opposite sex yet are still human. As there are lots of bugs you can see the differences in different types of bugs. Faces are also all similar but yet have lots of differences which make them unique. I also think it can be completed in 10 hours. The idea also connects with Alberto Schambers idea of bugs on faces.
